

My name is Kevin, and that's
"how I LIVE UNITED."

I've worked at Liberty Bank for 15 years and enjoy working with youth to help them attain some of the skills that I never had growing up. I see that too many of our kids don't know how to handle money. They've never been taught how to budget and why it's wise to save a little of what you earn. This sets them up for a lot more challenges later in life. That's why I volunteer to go into local high schools throughout Middlesex County every week to teach youth the skills they need to make good decisions when it comes to money. We review credit card scams, balancing accounts, investing, 401 (k)s, and most importantly, how to save some money every week. I feel great seeing kids take an active interest in financial matters. They want to earn and save money for college, a car, even their own retirement. And when more youth are taking that kind of responsibility that's good for everybody.
